Not sure I am the best to answer, but here is what I know

All of the DW and irrigation intakes in Colorado along the Animas and in New Mexico along the Animas and San Juan Rivers. DW and irrigation on the San Juan through the Navajo Nation are still closed at the direction of the Tribe.

The river intakes in Utah along the San Juan River are open as best I know.

Thanks to any/all who can help respond to this question. Once I've got answers to all of the questions I'll route to the JIC for them to approve and respond back to DOE.

Lisa:

I'm working with Lisa MV on some response for the Department of Energy. Can you tell us whether there are any intakes in any of the impacted areas that are still shut-off or restricted in any way? We're trying to answer the following question.

1. There are several states downstream due to drought conditions that are experiencing drought that had been pulling water possibly from the San Juan, Animas and Colorado rivers. What are the plans for those communities to get water now that restrictions for intake from those sources exist?

Thanks,

Laura Jenkins
